Great interior design is focused on how a space looks, and on how the space lives – with you, your family, and your guests.

Wiss Design Studio offers discerning residential and hotel clients interior design that produces comfortable, definitive, and beautiful spaces. From sketches and installation for one room to end-to-end management of a complete design-build concept, we provide creative and technical services to match the particulars of any project.

Principal of the firm Gary Wiss has over 15 years of professional expertise that combines education in fine art and architecture with a design vocabulary influenced by extensive global travel. Building trusted relationships with clients, he strives to achieve project aesthetics that are both collaborative and distinctly personal.

Gary provides focused attention on all project elements, selecting specialized team members as needed to optimize progress and results. Budgets and schedules are closely monitored, and all team members are committed to timely, transparent communication.

We're proud that clients consider us to be design partners for their most important spaces. Share with us what you like to see, feel, and be surrounded with. Tell us how you want to live – and Wiss Design Studio will transform your vision into an inspired reality.

✕ FairyHill, Occidental

This couple's Northern California home is an expression of what matters most to them: family, entertaining, and spirituality. Our contribution to this design-build project included furnishings, finishes, lighting, and porch areas.

The building's original circular footprint reflects sacred mandala geometry and creates rooms of irregular dimensions. The center meditation cave employs cedar for simplicity, warmth, and grounding. An small puja prayer porch with hand-hewn stone, fire pit, and water elements serves as an intimate spot to honor blessings and enjoy sweeping views.

The open-plan kitchen and living areas support lively conversation and the energy of visiting grandkids. Bedrooms constrained by the circle architecture emphasize bright neutral tones and a light ceiling finish to add volume.

The property's Fairy Hill name reflects the mystical coastal forest and inspired a naturalistic and whimsical design approach. Mossy green interior colors create a gentle flow between inside and outside. Pops of purple and vibrant prints add touches of levity. A handmade chandelier uses original Shaker wheel rims to evoke a 1960s orbital groove.

As they contemplate retirement, this hardworking couple has created a uniquely special place that reflects who they are – and what they love.

✕ Four Seasons Hotel, St. Louis

The goal for the new Four Seasons in St. Louis was to create a tranquil space for people entering from the attached casino. This project included all interiors from lobby and restaurants to 200+ guest rooms.

Views of the Mississippi River and the city's Gateway Arch informed much of the design approach. Silvery, textured tiles at the reception desk evoke sparkling water and steel, producing a tone-setting 'wow' factor. The graceful simplicity of the iconic arch is captured in the clean, modern lines of furnishings – creating a gently contemporary feel for a reserved Midwestern clientele.

The social lobby's color palette is earthy and muted for a warm, welcoming ambiance. Wood-paneled columns, a minimalist marble fireplace, and hobnail leather chairs suggest stately but approachable elegance. Sofas in lush orange and patterned pillows provide sparks of refined color and energy.

Guest rooms are simple and restful with hues of gray and taupe, soft textures, and muted patterns. The Presidential Suite evokes an updated modernist home – combining sharp angles and curves, abstract art, and area rugs over rich wood flooring.

Whether arriving for business or returning from bustling casinos, the hotel encourages visitors to take a breath, relax, and recharge in comfortable luxury.
